

Research Report Writing for Trade Union Officers Training Course

Professional Development Training Course Outline

Category	Trade Unions	Duration	5 Days
Base Fee	$1,500 USD	Delivery Mode	Online / On-site Hybrid

Course Introduction

In today’s rapidly evolving labour relations ecosystem, the ability of trade union officers to produce high-quality research reports, evidence-based policy briefs, and data-driven advocacy documents has become a critical competency. Unions are increasingly required to engage in collective bargaining negotiations, labour law compliance discussions, workplace dispute resolution, and socio-economic policy advocacy, all of which depend on strong research literacy, analytical writing skills, and report structuring techniques. Research Report Writing for Trade Union Officers Training Course is designed to strengthen participants’ capacity in qualitative and quantitative research analysis, labour market research, and structured report writing for industrial relations impact.

The course equips officers with practical skills to develop professional-grade research reports that influence policy, support workers’ rights, and strengthen union negotiation power. Participants will learn how to gather, analyze, and interpret data using labour statistics, survey tools, case documentation, and stakeholder interviews, and translate findings into compelling reports. With a strong focus on evidence-based advocacy, strategic communication, and policy influence writing, the course ensures union leaders can effectively articulate worker concerns in national and organizational decision-making spaces.
